

Give it to me now: How and where young adults in BC would like to receive sexual health information and services

Thursday August 25th, 2005 11 am – 12:30 pm

A presentation by:

Emily Falk, BSc, Fulbright Scholar, British Columbia Centre of Excellence for Women's Health

Ms. Falk's research addresses how and where young adults between 19 and 30 years old currently get information and services related to sexual health, how and where they would like to receive services, and what challenges prevent them from accessing information and services. The focus of the presentation will be on the results of a survey of current interactions between health care professionals and young adults between 19-30 years old in British Columbia in relation to the current Canadian STD Guidelines.
